A community food council examines how the local food system operates, and provides policy recommendations to improve that system. A food council is often made up of a diverse group of stakeholders for the purpose of improving the food environment within a particular community.

Creating a food council through resolution is a powerful tool that a local government can utilize to interact with the community in policymaking and seek guidance on complex food system issues.

issues. Food councils are becoming more commonly used and have proven to be an effective process for implementing and executing state and local food policies.

No food council is set up or run exactly the same; each one can be adapted to the specific needs of each community. That being said, a governing body can look to existing committees and councils in order to determine the organizational structure of the entity. Likewise, a food council can have any name and that name can be changed to match goals or objectives of that community.

What’s in a name?

The name “food council” is the most common name for these entities, but other names are also being used. Here are a few examples of food council names used in Kansas:

- Franklin County Food Policy Council
- Jefferson County Food Council
- Western Prairie Food, Farm and Community Alliance
- Crawford County Food System Advisory Council

What is a resolution?

A city or county can create a food council by enacting a resolution. A resolution is often a short 1-2 page motion that declares an action, policy, or goal set by the governing body. The components of a successful food council resolution include: findings; purpose statement(s); provisions on membership, duties and responsibilities, meetings, and reporting; and a means for a meaningful evaluation.

Why establish a food council?

There are several strategic reasons for a local government to create a food council. For one, being sanctioned by government action gives the council more “credibility and access to policymakers, potential official capacity to craft public policy, utilization of government facilities, resources and staff, and access to federal dollars targeted for local government initiatives.”

Further, a political champion can be a vital force behind the prioritization of the food system within existing city and county agencies as a tool to establish a support base and “get the public agencies marching with some direction. Having strong and influential support from a government organization can be crucial to the success of implementing new food policies. This document will outline the main components of a successful resolution, providing examples of each component within a sample resolution, and concluding with next steps to consider when creating a food council via resolution.

Map of Kansas Food Councils

Kansas Local Food and Farm Task Force

Cities and counties in Kansas are not alone in creating food councils. In 2014, the Kansas legislature established the Local Food and Farm Task Force. This task force has been charged with assessing and overcoming obstacles to increase locally grown food production and identifying potential funding opportunities to finance fresh and locally grown food initiatives. More information about the Kansas Local Food and Farm Taskforce can be found on the Kansas Department of Agriculture's website, at http://agriculture.ks.gov/divisions-programs/agricultural-marketing-advocacy-and-outreach-team/local-food-and-farm-task-force.
Components of a Successful Resolution

1. Findings

Findings are brief statements that describe the reasoning for the policy action. For example, a finding may highlight the state of the community’s food environment or prevalence of adult and childhood obesity, heart disease, or stroke. The findings should be community-specific. For example, if a city or county is located within a food desert, the resolution can identify this information.

2. Purpose

A resolution must include a clear and specific purpose statement. In this case, the purpose of the resolution is to establish a food council. Therefore, the purpose statement should be supplemented with other objectives, such as long-term goals promoting public health, healthy eating and living, or access to and affordability of healthy food in the community. The purpose should match the duties and responsibilities outlined in the main provisions of the resolution.

3. Membership

Within the resolution, the main provisions should outline the membership eligibility of the council. An effective food council has a diverse selection of individuals (diversity of geography, gender, race, ethnicity, education, background, etc.) that are able to come together to analyze and recommend policy considerations for the governing body. Diversity will enable the council to pull from a variety of perspectives and experiences in order to best navigate the food system and existing local policy.

There is no magic number for how many members should be included in the council; however, it is not uncommon to see councils with 10–20 members. Further, a council should consider either staggering or differing lengths of appointments, which will help prevent total loss of expertise and leadership in any given year and safeguard against political whims of the appointing body. Membership can include all appointed members (e.g. Allen County GROW Food & Farm Council) or only a portion of appointed members (e.g. Crawford County Food System Advisory Group).

For more information about membership criteria and the role of a permanent council member position, see Appendix A & Appendix B.
4. Duties and Responsibilities

The main provisions should set forth some of the council’s duties and responsibilities. These provisions should address how the council will move forward to meet the resolution’s purpose. This is a great way to continue the momentum from the time the resolution is enacted to the time when the council starts working.

5. Meetings

The resolution should outline the meeting frequency and open nature of the food council’s work. A publicly-appointed food council is usually subject to the requirements of open meeting laws. For more information about open meeting laws in Kansas, see the Public Health Law Center’s resource entitled Kansas Open Meetings Act, available at http://www.publichealthlawcenter.org/resources/kansas-farm-and-local-food-taskforce-resources.

6. Report and Evaluation

An important tool in the continued success of a food council is to highlight its impact on the community. In order to accomplish this goal, the resolution should specify a public report highlighting the work of the food council. In addition, the resolution should outline some form of evaluation process, which will guide food councils to review their practices to determine what worked, what did not, and what type of change has occurred in the community since the creation of the food council. Elected officials may choose to dissolve a food council in 3 years if it has not been functioning effectively.

7. Funding

Funding is an important component to ensure the viability of a food council. Often, the city or county funds the staff time for a permanent member on the council. This can either be identified in the membership section or in a separate section on funding. In addition to this important financial backing, the resolution should clearly state that the food council has the authority to apply for other types of funding, such as grants.

8. Effective Date

Finally, the resolution should end with an effective date, which will be the date of the resolution passage or some later date determined by the city or county.

Supplementing the Resolution with Bylaws

Notably, any information not included in the resolution can easily be determined and included within the food council’s bylaws. The goal of the resolution is to clearly declare the governing body’s goal of establishing a food council and giving that new council enough instructions that it can begin effectively. The bylaws can be drafted later by the council itself and set additional parameters and objectives. For more information about drafting bylaws for your food councils, see PHLC’s resource entitled Food Council Bylaws, available at http://www.publichealthlawcenter.org/resources/kansas-farm-and-local-food-taskforce-resources.

Steps to Consider When Creating a Food Council in Your Community

Do you believe a food council will benefit your community? Here are a few steps that will help get momentum rolling and encourage action and engagement in order to create a food council in your community.
Steps to Consider When Exploring a Local Food Council

1. Identify your champion

2. Recruit a team of people willing to help

3. Determine the level of interest among your elected officials

4. Schedule an informational interview

5. Determine the geographic boundaries and membership structure for the council

6. Work collaboratively to draft a common mission and purpose for the council

7. Determine roles and responsibilities for each team member

8. Contact other stakeholders to invite them to planning meetings

9. If interested in pursuing a public appointed council, start drafting a resolution

10. While writing a resolution, also write bylaws

11. Engage the media

12. Talk to your elected officials

13. Get on the agenda of your Council, Commissioners, etc.
   Make this an easy decision for your elected officials. Come prepared with:
   - The drafted resolution ready to be approved
   - The potential bylaws, in case they have concerns about turnover, meeting structure, etc.
   - A list of recommended appointees
   - Your team and your talking points ready to support the resolution

14. Know the resources to help you get started on the right track
   - Public Health Law Center resources (www.publichealthlawcenter.org/resources/kansas-farm-and-local-food-taskforce-resources)
   - Kansas Alliance for Wellness grants
   - Chronic Disease Risk Reduction, Healthy Communities Initiative, and other community health coalitions

Missty provides community education, facilitates community meetings, uses the Public Health Law Center’s tools for drafting resolutions and bylaws, and turns them into local resolutions and actions based upon the thoughts and feedback from the meetings she facilitates.

Conclusion

Ultimately, the resolution should be simple and easy to implement. There are several communities that have already enacted resolutions (see examples in Appendix C) and those should be looked to for guidance.

The next page of this resource is an outline of a resolution that was developed based on review of several resolutions enacted throughout the United States. In addition to the resolutions in the appendix, look to nearby communities or communities of similar size for additional help in drafting the resolution.

Food Council membership: Who should be at the table?

Every community is different, and you will know best which leaders in your community are both motivated to improve the local food economy and well-positioned to be effective leaders in this area. Here are a few general principles to consider:

• When composing your Council, think of food as a system. Who are the key players in the food system that will be impacted by and are able to help with the changes you are seeking to make?

• Diversity on your Council is key. Think about inviting members who are not the typical “foodies” or advocates who work on food and hunger issues. Food system improvements impact health, the economy, and the environment. Try to balance representation from these key areas. Also think about including a diverse selection of individuals (including diversity of geography, gender, race, education, income, culture, experiences, etc.) from a diverse selection of food system sectors.

• Pick members who have some understanding of policy and local government. As the changes you will be seeking will be likely to include policies, ordinances, planning documents, zoning, etc., having people who are knowledgeable about the system will help you be effective.

Other considerations

• How many members on the council?

• How long should a member’s term be?
  - One year? Two years?
  - Differing lengths?
  - Continuous?
  - Staggering appointments?

Food Council coordinator: Sample job description

Often, Food Councils are composed of volunteer members, but having staff assistance to set meetings, organize agendas, and do research for the Council can help you make progress faster. When setting up your Council, consider requesting staff assistance from the local government or organizations represented on the Council.

With as little as 0.15-0.2 FTE (full-time equivalent), you can ensure that the Council has the support it needs. This can be one staff person, or multiple staff persons in various departments, as long as each is required to support the Food Council in their job description.

Some typical tasks that a Food Council coordinator/staff may be asked to do:

- Organize meeting dates and locations.
- Work with the Chair to develop a meeting agenda.
- Take minutes at the meeting.
- Manage the Council’s email listserv, website, or social media presence.
- Conduct research on behalf of the Council, and report back on any findings.
- Arrange speakers who have expertise needed by the Council to provide presentations at meetings.
- Connect the Council to food-related events happening around the community.
- Act as liaison between the Council and the local government staff and officials to achieve the policy outcomes desired by the Council.
