Using Waivers and Releases for Activities on School Property

Each day presents new opportunities to practice healthy behaviors. Because of their role in the community, schools are in a unique position to promote active living for students and community members alike. Through well-designed policies, tailored to the community and implemented by knowledgeable and supportive staff, school can advance student nutrition, increase physical activity, and help develop healthier lifestyles.¹

Concerns about injuries, lawsuits, and “liability” are sometimes a hurdle to opening school facilities up for recreational uses. While there is no magic formula to avoid being sued, schools and community organizations can reduce their exposure through a variety of risk management strategies.² Requiring parents, students, or other participants to sign a waiver prior to participating in recreational activities is one possibility.

What is liability?

For purposes of this publication, liability can be defined as legal responsibility for another person’s injury or damages. There are numerous provisions within both state and federal law that serve as sources of potential liability for school districts. However, when a school district is considering allowing community use of its facilities for recreational activities, the possibility that someone who is using a school facility might suffer an injury and bring a claim against the district (or its
Using Waivers and Releases for Activities on School Property

A waiver is one way to reduce liability and manage risk for injuries that occur during recreational activities on school property.

Will a waiver protect me from being sued?

No, though many people will not sue because they signed a waiver.
Who should sign the waiver?

When waivers are used, it is important to take appropriate steps to ensure they are signed and collected from every participant before they are allowed to join in. This is particularly important when groups or teams are involved. If the participant is a minor, then the child as well as his/her parent or guardian should both sign.9

When is a waiver ambiguous?

A waiver is ambiguous if reasonable people can interpret it in more than one way.10 Waivers should always be written simply, clearly, and concisely. If any doubt exists, that issue will likely be resolved in favor of the injured party.

When does a waiver violate public policy?

A waiver might violate public policy if one person or entity has more bargaining power than the other. This could be true if one person has authority over the other, such as an employer’s relationship to an employee.11 A waiver may also violate public policy if a “public” or “essential” service is involved. These include services that are publically regulated or necessary, such as lodging, employment, public utility or health care.12 Minnesota courts have ruled that certain recreational activities (such as horseback riding13, scuba diving14, or skydiving15) do not involve the public interest and are not considered essential.

Can waivers provide any other benefits?

They can. Even when a waiver is not enforced, it may be a basis for other defenses. It can demonstrate that the school district was not negligent because it exercised reasonable case when providing the event or activity. A properly drafted and executed waiver can show that the school district or community partner satisfied its responsibility to warn participants about the dangers of the activity. A waiver can show that the participant was aware of the risks associated with the activity and willing to assume those risks. Finally, individuals who believe they are assuming all risks will, hopefully, act responsibly when participating.

How else can a school or community organization limit its liability?

Common sense precautions go a long way toward avoiding liability for injuries resulting from recreational activities. Organizations, like individuals, should always act reasonably. Additional precautions will vary depending on the activity. Some common risk management strategies include:

- Creating safety rules and handing them out to all students and parents. Rules should comply with any local rules, any local, state or federal laws, and any national standards.
- Eliminating known dangers where possible.
- Documenting all precautions taken to avoid harm or risk.
- Obtaining liability insurance that covers lawsuits arising from injuries.
- Forming joint powers or facility use agreements with other public entities or community organizations that specifically outline acceptable uses of school property and facilities.

Finally, school districts and other governmental entities have immunity from liability in certain situations.16
Using Waivers and Releases for Activities on School Property

This publication was prepared by the Public Health Law Center at William Mitchell College of Law, St. Paul, Minnesota, funded by the CDC’s Community Transformation Grant initiative and a Robert Wood Johnson Foundation’s Active Living Research grant (#69554).

The Public Health Law Center provides information and technical assistance on issues related to public health. The Public Health Law Center does not provide legal representation or advice. This document should not be considered legal advice. For specific legal questions, consult with an attorney.

Endnotes

1 Resources for school districts interested in pursuing health conscious initiatives and policies are available at http://www.publichealthlawcenter.org/.

3 Lubbers v. Anderson, 539 N.W.2d 398, 401 (Minn. 1995).

4 See Flom v. Flom, 291 N.W.2d 914, 916 (Minn. 1980); 4 Minn. Prac., Jury Instr. Guides--Civil CIVJIG 25.10 (5th ed. 2010).

7 Schlobohm v. Spa Petite, Inc., 326 N.W.2d 920, 923 (Minn. 1982).

8 Id.

9 It is important to note that Minnesota courts have not definitively addressed whether a parent can release liability for negligence on behalf of a minor. In addition, minors generally have the power to enter into contracts and disavow those agreements within a reasonable time after becoming an adult. See Scoles v. Franzen, C5-91-426, 1991 WL 180037 (Minn. Ct. App. Sept. 17, 1991) (unpublished opinion).

11 See Bunia v. Knight Ridder, 544 N.W.2d 60, 63 (Minn. Ct. App. 1996).

16 See Public Health Law Center, supra note 2.